INTRODUCTION

A literary work is the result of an imaginary work performed by the author. The existence of literary works is not only as entertainment, but as an enlightenment of the soul. So that he is able to provide benefits as well as entertainment. When we read a literary work, we seem to be carried away by the story told by the author through the language he writes. The benefit comes from the implied indigo contained in the story.

The novel is one of the parts of literary work that exposes the characters through a series of events and a composed story setting. The issues raised in the story of the novel usually occur around us, and then the author adapts them into the form of a novel. The author must be able to observe the surroundings and express them into the writing.

A teacher is a person who channels knowledge to others. According to the views of society, teachers apply not only education in schools but also in society. A professional teacher is visible in his responsibilities when performing each of his duties. They must be able to carry out their responsibilities to their learners, parents, society, nation, state and religion (Shabir, 2015).

In CPL and CPMK 14 students are required to be able to appreciate and criticize literary works, for example poetry, prose, and drama with several representation of the teacher’s personality and inner conflict in three Indonesian modern novels based on a review of literary psychology and its use as reading material for literary criticism courses.
approaches, one of which is by using a literary psychology approach. But in reality there are some students who do not understand this approach very well. This is evidenced by the needs analysis questionnaire that has been distributed to several students, the author sees that students have not been able to criticize literary works based on a review of literary psychology. If lecturers are assigned to criticize literary works by choosing several approaches, then they will choose a structuralism approach because it is considered easier to understand and work with. In contrast to literary psychology, this approach requires an in-depth analysis to see how the personalities of the characters in the story are.

There are several advantages in the approach to literary psychology, namely (1) it is very appropriate in studying aspects of personality in more detail; (2) is useful when studying abstract, absurd literary works, and makes it easier for readers to interpret the work.

Freud's personality structure consists of three kinds, namely the id, ego, and superego. The three systems are intertwined with each other to produce human behavior as a result of a combination of the three. Id is the most basic aspect that occurs in the human unconscious there are instincts or passions that appeared (Ahmad, 2011a). The ego is its behavior based on reality. While the superego controls the impulses of id (Ahmad, 2011b). That is, the ego is an implementative personality, that is, in the form of contact with the outside world, while the superego contains rules or values that are evaluative (regarding good and bad) (Marsanti et al., 2012).

The reason the author analyzes the personality and inner conflict of the teacher in three modern Indonesian novels is because the author sees many inner conflicts experienced by the teacher through the characters in the novel. To become a teacher is not an easy thing, they must be able to act as a teladan for students and the surrounding community. A teacher's behavior in socializing can also be an assessment for the community around his environment. So, the author wants to see how the inner or psychiatric conflicts experienced by the teacher who is supposed to be a role model in his environment.

The reading materials that are classified as products in this study are non-text books, which are knowledge enrichment books that can be applied to students and general readers. However, this book is not the main book in the learning process, but only as a reference to increase knowledge and improve the characteristics of science.

The update carried out in this study is that the author in analyzing the novel not only uses the novel, but the author wants to try to analyze three novels related to the personality and inner conflict of the teacher with a review of literary psychology. The author wants to see how the teacher is portrayed in this novel and how the mental state of the teacher the author wrote about in this novel. This research is expected to be used as reading material for literary appreciation courses so that students have many references in studying a literary work, especially in psychological studies. This research is also expected so that teachers can feel more appreciated for the services they have done to this generation of the nation.
RESEARCH METHODS

The method used in this study is a qualitative approach. This method aims to break down the analyzed cases according to the needs of (Salim, 2019) research. Most curriculum vitae and cases are prepared by building a person's curriculum vitae based on the records they remember. The psychological approach emphasizes the thorough analysis of literary works, both from the intrinsic side and the extrinsic aspects of (Abraham, 2017). In terms of intrinsic, what is discussed is characterization and representation, while in terms of extrinsics the things that must be discussed are about the author related to psychiatric issues, aspirations, ideals, philosophies of life, desires, and others. In this connection it is necessary to trace the biography of the author, actions and ways of thinking relating to the written literary work. By interpreting the psychological side of the author, it will make it easier to analyze the behavior and character of the story being written. What the author brings up in the writing is the author's psychiatric experience.

Then interviews were conducted with lecturers who were able to take literary criticism courses about the usefulness of novel personality representations and teacher inner conflicts in three modern Indonesian novels. (4) Evaluation; After data analysis, the next step is to evaluate. Evaluation activities are carried out by looking at the validity of the data that has been found and analyzed.

For data collection, a tool is needed that is, a data card to write down the data used for the basis of analysis that facilitates clarification or systematic categorization.
